Baltimore County police will be cracking down on child care centers, hospitals and nursing homes for not providing medical records to police. The Maryland Public Health and Mental Hygiene Administration is requiring providers to provide records of children and adults to police. The law was added in 2002 and requires providers to notify police within 48 hours if someone has been involved in an emergency with a mental health or substance abuse problem. The law states any adult charged with a violent crime must report to authorities. A Baltimore County police spokeswoman said the new requirement is being implemented to increase accountability and safety for both victims and the law enforcement community. According to police, parents are the most likely person to make a report to police. "Some of the problems we are going to be encountering, is for example, hospitals are shutting down," Baltimore County police spokeswoman Elise Armacost said. "They are refusing patients." Baltimore County police will soon have to gather medical records for all adults who are arrested. Police officials say this will allow them to determine if they need to track down other victims. “How we can take those and gather them in one place so that we can potentially identify other people who are victims,” Armacost said. “It’s something we have been trying to do for years.” Armacost also said it would benefit those with mental illness. “The reason for the law is that is that we can come in and say, ‘Hey, this person has a condition. They’re clearly exhibiting symptoms of that condition. But that condition has not resulted in violence,’” she said. “We can then go forward and say, ‘Okay, they’ve had some contact with law enforcement, but we can’t figure out how to find this condition.’” An earlier version
