As a structural basis for the transmembrane activation of the atrial natriuretic factor receptor, a site-specific crystallization of the receptor was performed. The ligand-receptor complex was produced in a stable form by a combination of limited proteolysis, fusion protein expression in Escherichia coli and receptor purification. A variety of conditions were tested for the formation of the ligand-receptor complex that were suitable for single-crystal X-ray analysis. After the optimization of the crystallization conditions, a [H-(N-Lys-Lys)-Gly]_n synthetic peptide, in which the C-terminal Gly of the agonist is replaced with Lys, was crystallized in the presence of phosphatidylethanolamine, the lipid component of the natural atrial natriuretic factor receptor. Crystals of the ligand-receptor complex are monoclinic and contain three molecules per asymmetric unit. The three-dimensional structure was solved by the molecular replacement method, using the structure of the N-terminal portion of the atrial natriuretic factor receptor (amino acids 1-224) as a search model. The structure of a peptide containing the binding motif in the second extracellular loop [H-(N-Lys-Lys)-Gly]_n reveals the structure of the active site, and a side-chain interaction between the first and second extracellular loops is identified. It provides new structural information about the mechanism of atrial natriuretic factor receptor activation.Abstract The guest-host charge-transfer (GHC) luminescence in Eu
